Harp It does a good job of making one or two cappuccinos in a reasonable amount of time. Its a little slow for making any more than that. The milk frother is also a pain to clean. Every time you use it you have to disassemble, clean, dry, and reassemble. It keeps me from using the machine as often as I'd like. Overall I have enjoyed it. I enjoy what it produces. You do have to clean the milk storage container, but it pulls right out, takes 2 minutes tops. You do have to pull off one little tube, but it only takes a few seconds. Make sure you let it warm up like the manual says though, it will show ready long before it actually is. With the Gaggia, you get large 58mm group head and heavy brass portafilter. If you do a google search on Lelit or Isomac Cappuccina, you should find some sites from which you can purchase these machines. I must confess, though, that I've never used the mentioned Delonghi machine. Just thought I'd give you some other options! Anthony No SEO style postings will be tolerated. You are the light of the world. At the Gourmet Products Show here, DeLonghi is unveiling extensions to its toaster, drip coffeemaker, toaster oven and espresso machine collections. Highlighting the company's new toaster offering for this fall is the ToastOR, a unit that can be operated vertically or horizontally. When used vertically, the ToastOR works as an upright longslot toaster with such features as selfcentering slots, and bagel and reheat cycles. Horizontally, the ToastOR can be used to reheat and cook such foods as pizza and sandwiches. In the horizontal position, the toasting rack automatically slides in and out. Cravedi said the addition of a swiveling base offers users the convenience of improved access to the machine, and its tank and controls wherever it is placed on a counter.

The new brewing system regulates the amount of water and period of time during which the water comes in contact with the coffee grounds, a technique, Cravedi said, that results in optimum flavor extraction. The units features a flavor selection function. The coffeemaker design is to be offered in four models, including manual and programmable timer models. In espresso machines, DeLonghi is unwrapping two new units showcasing a new filter holder that adjusts with the flip of a switch from one to two cups. The design eliminates the need for consumers to store a separate twocup filter holder attachment. The allinone design of the filter holder also makes ejections of used coffee grounds cleaner and easier, Cravedi said. The design prevents the accidental disposal of filter attachments, he said. The new filter holder is featured on the Bar 41 Caffe Norma pump espresso maker, which showcases an updated jet frother. The design of the frother allows users to prepare froth with less effort, Cravedi said. The stepup Caffe Carmen showcases two boilers— one for the pump espresso system; and one for a separate steam generator that drives the unit's automatic froth maker and instant froth dispenser. DeLonghi also is featuring a new digital convection toaster oven with a touchpad control panel, microchipcontrolled toast cycles. The company also is exploring the expansion of its retro collection, an industrialized, brushedchrome motif that launched last year with a line of toasters. The company added a retro kettle earlier this year and is looking at bringing the look to such categories as waffle bakers and percolators. Click Here Play video.
